

RESPECT FOR ELDERLY PEOPLE.

From an early age, we raise children to respect the elderly. Teachers at school and the family environment are the first educators of children. Here children learn how to respect and how to help adults

When we are elderly people, we feel the need for respect palpably. Because after the end of his working career, each person opens a new page in his life and socializes in an environment suitable for him, such as a retirement club, where he begins an active social life.

Each adult has accumulated a lot of experience, knowledge and skills, which he is happy to pass on to the younger generation. Together we recreate traditions and customs, and then they pass them on to the next generation. The mutual respect of young and old has progressed.

Elderly people led a dignified life, they participated in the building of their country with great energy, dedication and faith, therefore the younger generation should be grateful and respect them. This respect is felt on every holiday when flowers and gifts and wonderful greetings are addressed to the elderly.
