Brain circulation: foster exchange for young people to gain experiences abroad but also with the option to return to the home country with the new knowledge. Migration as a temporary experience, enriching personal lives and benefiting from broadening one's horizon, experiencing new cultures but also opportunities to return to the home country

Getting young people's voices heard; one way lower voting rights to younger age; active participation in decision making on local, national and European level; offer structures and possibilities

Support education combined with active participation (not just formal education) in all countries, especially in the healthcare sector. Discover new professional avenues in each country. Job creation including gender equality, equal pay.

Digital platforms to facilitate the exchange of ideas, communities between generations and internationally

Exchange of competencies between young and old; seniors can act as advisers

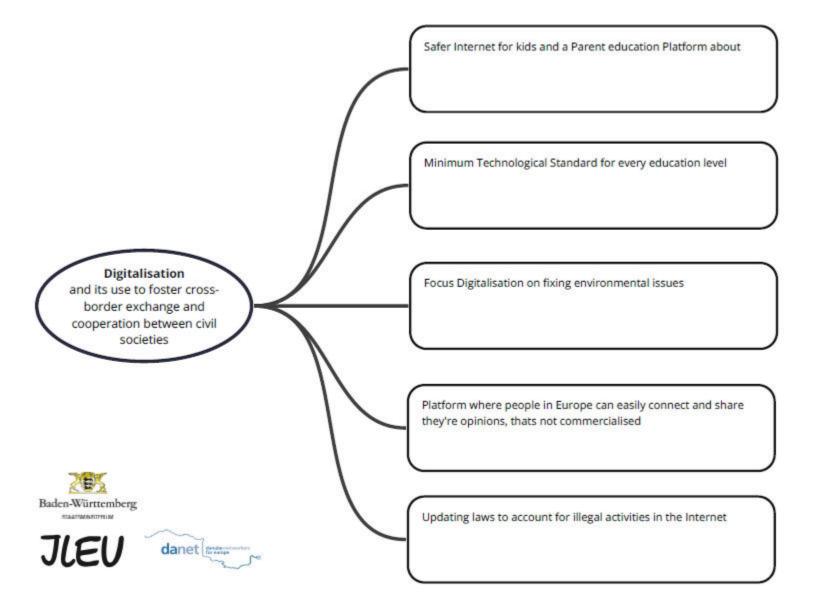

Demographic Change:

With whom will I be getting old?

Spreading the awareness of environmental issues and sustainable topics

More political participation, prevention of corruption

Better political and environmental education

More public perception for sustainable development goals of the United Nations

Acceptance of responsibility for environmental pollution and destruction by companies and the political leaders

Sustainability, Climate Change and environment

Cultural awareness has to start early and to be cultivated in schools, learning programs in Europe should be more open for intercultural and intergenerational experiences,

Politicians should devote more energy and financial means to cultural exchanges between eastern and western Europe, fundings for professional exchange between civil societies, NGOs and institutions

Culture & cultural exchanges should be made more accessible to everybody but especially to vulnerable groups

Politician should be aware of the importance of cultural awareness to beat racism and intolerance.

Intangible cultural heritage as a crucial connecting as a crucial connecting element between Danube countries and generations

